Irongh nothing decisive had occurred either in he active operations of the war or in the enleavors still making at Vienna to effectuate neace. The resignation by General Canrohert of the command of the French Urimean army, and the appointment to that position of General Pelissier, seems to betoken that a new-war polcy is to be adopted, at variance with that which has been hitherto pursued. The French army, was to be reinforced by 80,000 men. The anycountry looked for debate on Lord Ellenborough's notion in the House of Lords respective these
